THE JOHN XXIII SERIES

The COMPLETE ENGLISH PROPERs FOR THE HIGH MASS FOR ALL SUNDAYS AND PRINCIPAL FEASTS is the premiere publication of the JOHN XXIII SERIES OF LITURGICAL MUSIC, a product of Saint Joseph's College, Rensselaer, Indiana. This series is designed to implement the Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy of December 4, 1963.

In addition to Father Paul Arbogast of Saint Mary's Cathedral, Covington, Kentucky, editor of these ENGLISH PROPERs, the following faculty members deserve special mention for their contributions to the JOHN XXIII SERIES: Father Eugene Lindusky, O.S.C. of Crosier Seminary, Onamia, Minnesota, whose works include the Organ Accompaniment to the English Proper; Father Columba Kelly, O.S.B. of Saint Meinrad Archabbey, Saint Meinrad, Indiana; Mr. Murray Bradshaw, doctoral candidate at the University of Chicago; and Doctor John B. Egan, associate professor of music at Saint Joseph's College. All students whose original compositions are featured in the JOHN XXIII SERIES have studied liturgical composition under Doctor Egan.

As Director of Saint Joseph's Summer School of Liturgical Music, I wish to thank the faculty and students for their contributions to the JOHN XXIII SERIES OF LITURGICAL MUSIC. Theirs is a genuine expression of the aggiornamento so eloquently urged by His Holiness, Pope John XXIII, to whose memory this series is humbly dedicated.

I also wish to express sincere appreciation to the following: His Excellency, the Most Reverend Richard H. Ackerman, D.D., Bishop of Covington; the Right Reverend Bonaventure Knaebel, O.S.B., Archabbot of Saint Meinrad Archabbey; the Very Reverend John S. Smerke, O.S.C., Provincial of the Crosier Fathers; the Very Reverend John E. Byrne, C.P.P.S., Provincial of the Precious Blood Fathers; the Very Reverend Raphael H. The system of pointing is similar to that used in the Hymnal 1940 as published by The Church Pension Fund.

INTRODUCTION

In order to discover which elements of the liturgy are best adapted to the building of the people of God, the Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy emphasizes the need for controlled experimentation during the period immediately before us. The Constitution also urges us to preserve the treasures of the past, especially in the field of sacred music.

This setting of the English Propers is an effort to satisfy both directives of the Constitution. Although it makes use of the Gregorian chant melodies traditionally heard in the Church, the principles for psalm recitation are those developed through centuries of experience by our English-speaking Christian brethren of other faiths.

The simpler antiphonal chant melodies, found most often in the divine office, have been adapted to various texts in the same manner in which the authors of chant themselves adapted a single melody to serve several texts.

The psalmody used was devised for the English language with its peculiarities of accent. This system of psalmody can be used with any unrevised translation of the psalms.

In the interim period before the general revision of the liturgy, this book should prove useful, inspiring the faithful to a greater love of God through the liturgy and psalter, and providing some of the experience and experimentation necessary before a truly effective setting can be made for the English liturgy in a more developed state.

USE OF THE PROPERS

The propers in this book are arranged to suit the needs of many situations.

They can be sung in any of the following ways:

1. as written — using the chant melodies for the antiphons and the corresponding psalm tones for the psalms.
2. as psalmody throughout — using any of the eight psalm tones for an entire selection. For this purpose, both antiphons and psalms are pointed.
3. harmonized throughout — using any of the harmonized settings published separately on cards.
4. in any combination of the above.

Use of the Anglican system of pointing has made the latter three arrangements possible. All cadences in this system are of uniform length and rhythmic structure. Since cadences have been indicated in all the texts throughout the book, the texts may be sung to any setting.

The melodies for unison tonal settings are based on the eight Gregorian psalm tones. Other arrangements are furnished for two equal, three equal, SAB, and SATB voices. All of these arrangements are printed on the card inserts for the propers.

The way in which the text should be sung depends on the ability of the choir and the situation. For instance, singers who are unable to sing the melodies as given, may prefer to sing the entire proper by following the pointing of the text, using a unison or harmonized tonal setting. Or, if the singers are well-prepared and optional verses are added, alternation of the unison and harmonized versions of the psalm tones, together with the period repetition of the antiphon melody (perhaps by the congregation) may be effective:

Antiphon

Psalm, v. 1, unison

v. 2, harmonized

Antiphon

Psalm, v. 3, unison

v. 4, harmonized

Antiphon

etc.

Glory be, unison

As it was, harmonized

Care should be taken, with such an arrangement, that the various musical elements are all of corresponding modality.

I. THE MELODIES

The melodies are modeled after the original antiphonal chants as closely as possible, according to the original rules for the adaptation of type and centonized melodies to new texts. In some modes, these type melodies are practically nonexistent, and in these, the spirit and melodic contours of the original chants have been retained. In other modes, the same type melody is found set to many different Latin texts; these melodies have been adapted with some frequency to English texts in these propers.

The importance of expressing the text, and of making the melodies a vehicle for this expression, cannot be overemphasized. The accents of the text are the soul of the melodies; they should be given careful attention as the culmination points of the dynamic line, even when the accented syllable itself receives but a single note of melody while the following syllable has many more notes. The horizontal episema (—) below a note indicates that the notes should be slightly lengthened to punctuate or emphasize the melodic and textural idea. Bar lines are guides to the proper phrasing of the music.

II. THE PSALM TONES

These are of uniform rhythmic structure, and are interchangeable; however, the tone should correspond to the modality of the other elements of the musical entity.

Intonations

Intonations are melodic settings for the first two syllables of psalm verses. In general, intonations are used whenever the psalm verse is immediately preceded by a chanted melody, antiphon, respond, or alleluia. Intonations may also be used after harmonized verses or throughout a psalm for greater solemnity. Otherwise, the text may begin on the recitation note of the psalm setting.

Reciting Tones

The prolonged notes between the intonation and the mediant cadence, and between the mediant cadence and the final cadence, indicate the reciting tone or tones. The syllables of the text should move along at a brisk but decorous speed, care being taken to bring the accents of the text into prominence, and to make the meaning as intelligible as possible to the entire congregation. Note that the reciting tone for the second half of each verse is the same as the final note of the mediant cadence.

Cadences

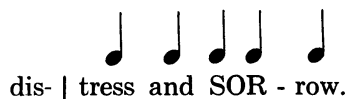

These are measured cadences. The mediant cadence consists of three notes, the accents falling on the first and third notes. The final cadence consists of five notes, the accents falling on the first, third, and fifth notes.

The beginning of the mediant cadence is indicated in the text by a single vertical line: | . The end of the mediant cadence is indicated by a double vertical line: || . A comma above the text ' indicates a pause, or slight prolonging of the preceding syllable.

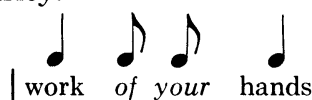

The pointing in the antiphon texts beneath chant melodies occasionally indicates two or three complete repetitions of the psalm tones. In this case, a vertical dotted line (;) indicates the end of one verse and the beginning of the next.

The accents of the text are adapted to the melodic structure of the cadences by following these rules:

1. Capitalized syllables are sung to two notes of the cadence:

2. Italicized syllables are sung to the same note of the cadence. Thus the single quarter note is divided into two eighth notes. This should be done smoothly, without excessive angularity.

3. If the mediant cadence has four syllables instead of three, and none are underlined, the final note of the mediant cadence is repeated, both notes remain quarter notes.

These basic rules apply to the harmonized psalm tones as well as those in unison. Although some of the traditional harmonizations are printed in doubled time values for the singers' convenience, their actual recitation should move at the same general speed as the unison tones.

III. OPTIONAL PSALM VERSES, REPETITIONS, ETC.

The Introit (Entrance Song), Offertory (Offertory Song), and Communion (Communion Song) and traditionally processional chants, intended to accompany the entrance procession, the offertory procession, and the communion procession. They are "antiphonal" chants, consisting essentially of the singing of a psalm, two groups of singers alternately singing the verses. To the psalm itself is added the antiphon, a kind of recurring theme-song, which is sung at the beginning and at the end of the psalm, and may be inserted periodically between the verses. Since it is permissible and desirable to restore the psalm more fully in these processional chants, several optional verses have been added to the Introit, in addition to the one verse and the "Glory be to the Father" that are now required by the rubrics. These may be sung to make the Entrance Song more truly a processional chant.

Similarly, a number of psalms have been given in the appendix that are considered liturgically appropriate for the communion procession. One of these, the psalm for the Introit of the day, or the psalm from which the communion antiphon is taken may be used together with the communion antiphon to expand it into a processional chant. A similar procedure may be followed at the Offertory.

The Gradual, Tract, and Alleluia (Meditation Song) are not processional chants, but rather a meditative interlude between the readings. The Gradual, Responsory, and Alleluia are "responsorial" chants, in which the group repeats an identical refrain (Respond or Alleluia) after each verse sung by the soloist. Only one verse now remains for each responsory. The Respond, however, may and should be repeated at the end of the verse of the Gradual, as is indicated.

The Alleluia melodies may be used interchangeably. The complete list appears in Appendix II. In addition to these Alleluias, an Alleluia from the Graduale or Liber Usualis may be used if desired. The mode of the Alleluia should correspond to the mode of the psalm tone used for its verse, as well as to the mode of the Gradual Respond preceding it.
